Instead of the even more high profile loss of the Normandy, which saw the first allied assault against the Wulff Line in the Nachtjagd Operation, the Komet sank. The Komet took two hits before it was stricken, but the first hit was a critical hit that destroyed the ship. The Komet was the first allied ship to be sunk in World War II. The Komet sank in the middle of the Japanese Navy at the Battle of Leyte Gulf. The Komet sank at 1:06am local time. Despite the Komet sinking, the Komet had performed well in combat. The ship had damaged two Japanese battleships and for the whole battle it was in the thick of a fight. Because of the danger the Komet was in, the pilots were allowed to land on land without a pilot and just be picked up by a moving airlifter. After the Komet was sunk, the Komet and its 250 dead sailors went down as one of the most costly battleships in history.
